Monitoring and Accountability

- For improved policing, there is a need for the real-time maintenance and monitoring of criminal activities. Data at both central and district levels should be kept for comprehensive district-wise analysis.

Police Reforms

- Police reforms that were directed by the Supreme Court of India in 2006 should be implemented, such as Police Complaints Authority, State Security Commission, separation of investigation and law & order units, etc., and the data should be maintained regularly to improve accountability.

Sensitisation of Sexual Crimes against Children

- There is a need for a multi-stakeholder approach to be adopted for creating awareness and sensitising people to prevent sexual abuse of children, by engaging with all the stakeholders i.e. children, families, communities, schools, colleges, civil society organisations and the police.

Community Policing

- It is important that citizens gain faith and are comfortable in reaching out to police when they witness or face crime. For this, the police-citizen relationship needs to be improved through trust building and awareness.
- Police officials need to be sensitised to involve citizens as partners in policing, welcome inputs from the community and act in a collaborative and co-operative manner when it comes to reporting of cases, leads, etc. For this, training and counselling of police officials on the behavioural skills towards citizens needs to be done.
